USA First Supports Increasing U.S. Military

The Largest Military Advocate Group Welcomes New Advocates

PHILADELPHIA, PA., MAR. 28, 2017 – Non-profit advocacy group USA First announced it will support increasing the U.S. military presence and troops in the Middle East. USA First plans to host a series of rallies and advocate outreach to gain more advocates to work in its local chapters.

The group re-announced its stance as a result of increased crimes in the Middle East. USA First, like its namesake, strives to advocate for actions that immediately benefit the United States of America, above all other nations.

“USA First serves to take care of the United States because when the U.S. fails, everyone fails. As a big brother to other nations, we have a responsibility to advocate what is best for us, before we think about helping others,” USA First Executive Director Floyd R. Turbo said.

Since President Donald Trump was elected, USA First has received numerous inquiries of how Republicans can take action and become advocates in their local communities.

“I love being a resource as an advocate in my community. I get to share my beliefs with other likeminded citizens as we stand up and give back to the U.S.,” Lead Philadelphia Area Advocate Bob Smith said.

USA First conducts outreach to local families who are close to men and women who are currently serving in the military. USA First’s outreach includes building strong relationship ties in the community through advocating the importance of military need in the Middle East.

“Even though I miss my brother, I know his service is needed. Tensions run high in Middle East right now and it won’t get any better without American aid. Non-profits like USA First provide an environment that I feel safe expressing my beliefs in,” Betty Cook said.

Aside from advocating, USA First hosts events to help the U.S.’s troops. On a monthly basis, advocates join concerned community members to make care packages to be sent overseas.

“My kids and I love giving back to our troops. At a young age, my son and daughter gain a clear understanding of supporting the U.S. and the men and women who serve. Creating the care baskets is a fun, interactive way to involve younger advocates,” Advocate and Mother Sally Hans said.

USA First welcomes prospective advocates of all political parties. Interested advocates can attend advocate training seminars to learn about ways they can get involved. USA First will schedule rallies in next three months. No prior advocate experience is necessary.

Peace Now! Opposes Military Increases in Middle East

The Non-profit Offers Alternatives to War

PHILADELPHIA, PA., MAR. 28, 2017 – Non-profit advocacy group Peace Now! announced it will oppose increasing U.S. military presence in the Middle East. This announcement occurs as Middle East tensions subside.

Peace Now! plans to host educational events to inform community members of alternatives to increasing troop population. Community members can learn from existing advocates in support of minimizing U.S. troops.

“The advocacy group serves as a resource to the community. Citizens can learn about alternatives the U.S. can pursue instead of putting our men and women in harm’s way,” Peace Now! President Helene Shesright said.

Since President Trump’s election, and the “Make America Great Again” slogan gained popularity, Peace Now! has conducted a new method of outreach through social media. Peace Now! maintains a Facebook page and Twitter handle.

“Desperate times call for desperate measures. We as vigilant citizens need to stand up for what is right, even in the darkest of times. Traditional door-to-door advocating just isn’t cutting it anymore. We must go to where the future advocate is,” Lead Greater Philadelphia Area Advocate Tim Brady said.

Peace Now! encourages community members weekly to call their local politicians to influence voting and U.S. war efforts. Physically picking up the phone literally speaks volumes over a traditional email or letter.

“Because of Peace Now!, I’ve been able to learn about alternatives the U.S. can do besides sending endless lives overseas. I’m happy to do my part and call my local politicians to make a difference,” New Peace Now! Advocate Rebecca Bloom said.

Peace Now! will move to a new meeting place to accommodate high interest of advocates. Peace Now! will continue to explore new and unique ideas to continue advocating for peace in the Middle East through peaceful assembly.

“It is exciting for so many advocates wish to join Peace Now! and advocate for a great common purpose. I’m looking forward to our new event space where we can comfortably host 50 to 60 more members than we already have,” Facilities Manager Jan Herman said.

Peace Now! regularly holds peaceful demonstrations and public information sessions for prospective advocates.
